LOCALETS

Rev. A. S. Tuttle, M. A., pastor of the 5th Ave. Methodist church, Medicine Hat, will preach at the appointments on this circuit on Sunday, Feb. 25th. The occasion is the mission anniversary. Mr. Tuttle is one of the ablest men in Alberta, and all attending these services will be sure of a rare treat.

Mr. Lawson took charge of the services in the Lomond church on Sunday night. Mr. Armstrong is gaining strength slowly and expects to leave in a week or so for surgical treatment.

W. V. Davies blew himself to a new Ford on Thursday, purchasing from W. A. Teskey, local agent.

Ma and Mrs. Robt. Plunkett and family returned from a trip to the southern states on Friday of last week. Bob reports things a little dull down south and thinks more than ever of Alberta. They were snow-bound in Minneapolis for a few days, the snow being more than three feet deep.

Chas. Adams, concluding that idleness was not conducive to happiness, has entered into the automobile business, taking on the McLaughlin agency. Mr. Adams will erect a garage on his lot on Center street, 30x50 feet, having given the contract to Jens Sokvitne. Work of erection will be commenced as soon as the Holo and Hedges barn is completed.

W. H. Smith was in Calgary on business most of this week.

Mrs. Holden is taking over the rooming house formerly in charge of S. A. Beckett. She undertakes supervision on the 19th.

"Nick" Holden will erect a blacksmith shop on the corner of First Street South and start in business for himself. He expects to be ready for business in two weeks' time.

A couple of spotters visited Lomond this week, but apparently did not locate anything worth bringing to light.

The rooms formerly occupied by The Press in the Frownfelter building are being fitted up as an office by Dr. Walkey.

G. F. Farrell brought us a small mess of new potatoes the other day. Sort of second growth on the 1916 start.

promptly and heartily that there is no question about the true patriotic spirit of the people here.

The Red Cross Society is equally well supported by the splendid work of the ladies and the amounts given by Bow City residents.

It is only fair to state that the visits and addresses of Messrs. Tweedie and Buchanan, M.Ps., inspired and assisted materially in the above splendid results.

Local Horse Carries Off the Honors

"ELRADZI" the percheron stallion, owned by E. G. Haley and Chas. Dalton, east of Lomond, out-pointed the exhibition stallion carried on the government demonstration train which stopped at Travers a few days last week. Though the local horse was pitted against the best sire from the Davenport ranch north of Calgary and was under flesh condition and weight, he showed more of the cardinal points in breeding and type and was pronounced as near a perfect type of animal as they had seen. Messrs Haley and Dalton were approached to allow "Elradzi" to accompany the demonstration train for a month's time but could not see their way clear to do so just at this period.

The fact that horse breeding is receiving the attention it does in the neighborhood and that animals of such fine type as "Elradzi" were to be found here was considerable of a surprise to the lecturers on the demonstration train, and they did not fail to emphasize the advantage of encouraging the breeding to such high class stock.

Chas. Dalton won second place with his registered percheron mare recently purchased at Pincher Creek.

The Red Cross committee in charge of the tea held last Saturday afternoon in D.A. Anderson's building are delighted with their success. They realized a sum of $62.00

Consternation was manifest on Wednesday when "Cap" Blake received a sentence of three months and forty dollars costs from Jos. Rodgers, J. P. on a case of d. & d. conduct happening at Jang's shortly after New Year. A mounty from Retlaw took charge of the case. The Press understands that "Cap" is appealing the case and is on liberty from Lethbridge now pending further developments. A bunch of sympathizers celebrated the case by tearing things up around town that night. Of course they were under the influence of intoxicants and were pretty well scared up when they came to the next morning and realized what they had done.

Agricultural Society to be Organized in Lomond

Though Lomond missed the educational advantage of a visit from the government demonstration train we will, to all intents and purposes, enjoy the privilege of holding the first agricultural exhibition in this part of Alberta. A public meeting will soon be called for organization, and though a trifle late, it is intended to hold the first exhibition this summer.

There is nothing that can be mentioned that encourages the agriculturalist to such an extent as a local exhibit, and furthermore, it provides a social outlet for the necessary expansion of rural development.

A number of prominent local stock breeders are standing behind this project and The Press will be glad to lend publicity to all details and advance the worthy cause at every possible angle.

What? In Lomond and on Sunday Too!

When the sun shines bright and spring is near,
And the day is wondrous fair—
Some people get the fever "right"
And long for the open air.

"Cooking" and "waiting" and "sticking around"
Become an "awful pest".
So they get a car and start to ride far,
To get the air and (the) rest.

And far they go o'er ice and snow,
Till they're filled with ecstasy.
He forgets the Ford is not a board
And wasn't meant to be.

Because, when he let go of the wheel—
The reason we blush to relate—
The little old Ford kept a-rambling on
And the poor bunch met their fate.

You've probably seen in picture shows
A similar smash.
When the hero forgot to watch the wheel—
And the car turns o'er with a crash.

For the windshield which was, but is no more,
We shed a passing tear.
But the steering rods show that "love as you go,"
Is surely a very "bum steer".

LOMOND, FEBRUARY 16, 1917.

The Press hesitates to express any opinion on the action of J. Ps. in the course of their duties. It is a hard position to be in and one which should call forth sympathy from the public rather than condemnation. No right-thinking man would deliberately bring disgrace upon another by pronouncing a sentence of jail confinement without a just cause. It appears that an example has to be meted out every once in awhile to maintain the majesty of the law. It must be admitted that the boys have been carrying things with a free hand for a long time and have on numerous occasions exceeded reasonable limitations. It is nothing to their credit that steps had not heretofore been taken to put a stop to such nuisance. The lack of police protection appeared to act as a license for an open town and it is time that a little order was brought into action.

Another item that could be touched upon is the inordinate use of profane language on the streets. Sometimes we wonder if the men realize what a grave breach of propriety they are committing. A little forethought in this regard would retain to a man his self respect and the respect of ladies who in passing cannot help but hear the contaminating remarks.

Can Lomond afford to go into a deep well proposition? Some say yes. Some say no. The public meeting on Monday night recommended the attempt to locate a shallow well near the limits so as to make possible a domestic supply. This procedure calls for very little expenditure of money and if exhausted without satisfactory results other expedients could be considered. The Press would recommend a reservoir system for water supply other than that for domestic use. A giant reservoir with a filter running from this to an adjacent well could readily supply all the town's requirements for barn and stock purposes and could also be used in time of fire. A great quantity of water drains to a point near the Ogilvie elevator and this might readily be chosen as a location for the reservoir.

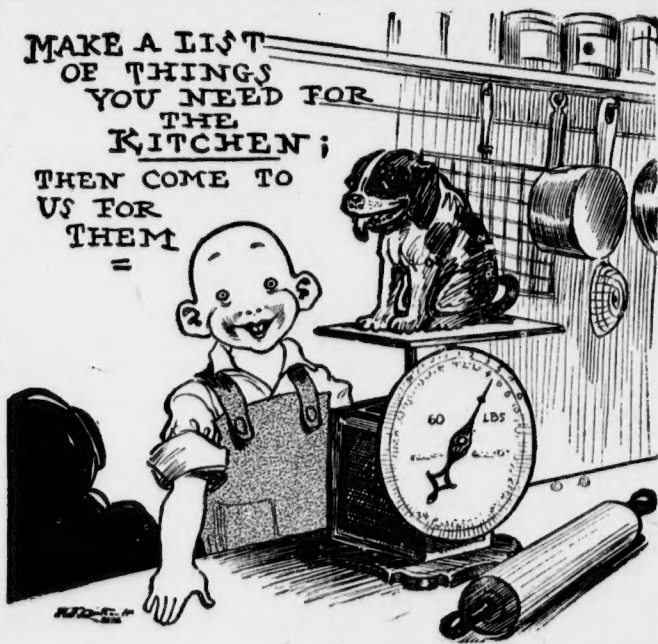

As they say, nobody knows what success a deep well might be, but it entails a large expenditure and is purely a gamble. A large flow might be tapped and in that case everyone would be delighted; but, on the other hand, there would be hard feelings, jangling bees and a general source of displeasure established.

As regards fire protection, the action of erecting a small station where ladders and tools can be stored in a convenient location, is a good idea. Also the recommendation to encourage the installation of numerous hand extinguishers.

SYNOPSIS.

Henry Allen, a young married man, is sentenced to be executed for killing the man who won the affections of Allen's wife. Allen's brother, Andrew, known to the criminal world as "The Master Mind," determines to avenge his brother. He writes the district attorney that he will send him white, red and black blank cards indicating the progress of his plans for revenge.

Andrew discovers that the district attorney who convicted Henry is in love with an orphan girl who once saved his life. The district attorney, Wainwright, has been searching for this girl, but cannot find her.

Andrew finds the girl and after conspiring to send her to prison gets her released. He then educates her.

The Master Mind, Andrew, then provides a family and a house for the girl, Lucene. The members of the "family" are ex-crooks living under assumed names. Lucene, however, does not know of their past. Andrew takes the position of butler in the house.

Lucene's three associates represent themselves as her father, mother and brother. They take the name of Blount under Andrew's commands. Finally, unknown to Lucene, they quarrel among themselves.

Wainwright, the district attorney, is lured to the Blount establishment by Andrew and accomplices. Wainwright has loomed up as a leading candidate for governor of New York state. Andrew plots his ruin.

Lucene meets Wainwright. It is a case of love at first sight. Each remembers the occasion when the girl saved his life by binding a tourniquet around a wrist injured in an automobile accident. They marry.

Creegan, a notorious western thief, is summoned east by Andrew for a mysterious purpose. Creegan talks with Walter Blount, who is a criminal posing as Lucene's brother.

CHAPTER IX.

The Advent of Creegan.

WALTER sought the library immediately after dinner, to smoke and to brood over various personal concerns of his own. He found, indeed, that his moods were fickle to such an extent that he hardly knew from hour to hour whether he were glad or wretched. Always, at the back of his thought, there was the haunting dread of the detectives that sought his trail.

On account of them he was grateful for this refuge. But, on the other hand, he experienced a growing alarm over this intimate relation with Wainwright, the renowned foe of criminals such as he. There was something monstrous to Walter in the fact that he, the thief, was here posing openly, if not boldly, as the brother-in-law of the most effective district attorney New York had ever possessed, whose popularity thus secured him fair now to make the man the chief executive of the state. This association with Wainwright kept the youth in a constant tremor of apprehension lest the worst befall. He expostulated in vain with Andrew, who treated him and his arguments with a galling contempt. His offset to the disdain of the Master lay in the patent admiration accorded him by Helen Wainwright, the great man's sister, who, to be sure, was merely a schoolgirl of sixteen, on her vacation, yet the heiress to a tidy fortune and remarkably pretty, if not especially burdened with brains. With something of her brother's power of idealization, though with a less worthy subject, she was able to see in Walter excellence enough to make him the hero of her first foolish maidenly dreaming.

On his part, Walter, drawn by her dainty face and demure manner, was inclined to think that he might make himself a safe position in the world and secure a satisfactory living without work by marrying this bread and butter miss. Unfortunately, however, he soon found that the carrying out of his design was beset with difficulties, for somehow latterly it seemed that he was never to see Helen for a moment alone, much less given opportunity for an elopement even were the preliminary arrangements made.

As he meditated now, it was clear to him that he must appeal directly to Lucene for aid in the execution of his purpose. Under this necessity he was irritated by the fact that already, under Andrew's compulsion, he had set himself before his putative sister in a remarkably bad light. He had been forced to pretend financial distress to her and beg her to help him in saving him from exposure and disgrace. Naturally, to save the possibility of baring the whole hateful truth to her husband, Mrs. Wainwright had yielded to his demands and supplied him repeatedly with money without her husband's knowledge. The fact increased her self contempt. But Walter's sole concern in the matter was dissatisfaction over the effect these transactions must have in making her hostile to himself and so an obstacle, not a help, in his plan to possess Helen.

Walter scowled as he reflected on the fact that this financial intriguing with Lucene was altogether an annoyance to him since even the money involved did not remain with him, but was invariably turned over to Andrew by that taskmaster's orders. "Devilish poor pickings, I call it!" was the thief's unspoken comment, with a sneer. Anyhow, he decided he must make the effort to enlist Lucene's assistance in his wooing of Helen. With this resolve he looked up to behold Parker in the doorway.

"A gentleman to see you, sir," was the announcement.

Walter was astonished and alarmed, for he knew of no acquaintance likely to be within miles of this neighborhood and certainly none aware of his identity as Walter Blount. But before he could determine an answer to the waiting servant Andrew himself appeared.

"Pardon me, sir," he said in tones of the utmost respect; "but perhaps you had better leave the matter to me. I think I know the man's business. It is really not of the least importance, sir." He gave a low order to Parker.

"Oh, all right, if you say so," Walter returned, grumpily, concealing the relief he felt in learning that this was probably another of his tyrant's contrivances rather than a pursuer on his own trail. "Who is the guy?" he asked, as Parker disappeared after the low spoken command from his employer.

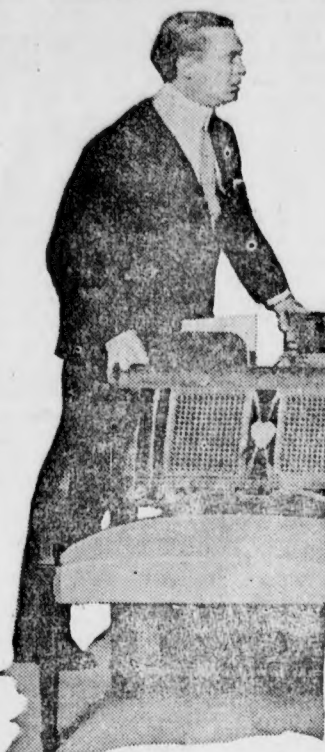

Andrew regarded the young man with wintery eyes, through narrow lids.

"That," he said gently, but with an infection that was convincing, "is one question too many." Then, he turned slowly, and went out of the room, unmindful of the scowling thief, who cringed helpless under his domination.

Andrew, after leaving the library, ascended directly to his own room at the top of the house and there found the caller whom Parker had just guided thither.

"My eye!" the somewhat rough appearing individual remarked amiably, as the Master Mind entered. "This is some swell joint, hey?"

"Mr. Wainwright will be pleased with your commendation, sir," Andrew answered, with a manner of habitual servility.

"Who is the guy?"

"Say, don't you get fresh, old geezer!" the visitor exclaimed angrily. "And, anyhow, why am I tucked up here in the attic. What's the game, eh?" He stood for a moment, blinking thoughtfully at the butler of the household, and a sudden recollection assailed him. "Wainwright's just got married—what?"

"Yes, sir," Andrew replied, still in his assumed character. "Mr. Wainwright was married about six months ago, sir."

"Some class to him!" the caller declared, with much respect, if little admiration. "Married and nominated for governor all in the same month. That's going some, believe me!" He nodded toward the window, and there was a noticeable apprehensiveness in his voice when next he spoke. "Say, 'bo, what's that big building off across there on the hill? Ain't no jail 'round here, as ever I heard."

"No, sir," Andrew said. "That is the Powhattan Asylum For the Insane, under the direction of the celebrated Dr. Forbes." Abruptly a change came into the manner of his address, and he spoke to the stockily built man facing him with an incisive directness that caused the sharpened features of his listener to express a new, suspicious alertness. "You are from Chicago, sir?"

"What's that to you?" the fellow snarled, his small eyes lowering.

Andrew wasted not time. "Your name is Creegan," he said coldly. "You were sent here by Mr. Whitcomb."

"Well, now, Mr. Know-it-all," was the insolent retort. "Maybe I was, and maybe I wasn't. What's the answer?" "You were to inquire for Walter Blount, but another person was to give you a sign," Andrew set the fingers of his right hand to the familiar symbol of protection against the evil eye.

The heavy face of the visitor relaxed instantly, and he breathed a sigh of relief.

"So you're the guy!" he growled. "I'm the man, yes," Andrew corrected.

Creegan went close and spoke in a whisper, his face lighted now with a glow of avarice.

"Listen!" he said rapidly. "The boss said this was a pipe, that there'd be ten thousand in the haul for me, and even if I was pinched they wouldn't do anything to me. That gets my nanny. Say, is it on the level?"

"It is."

"Just the same," Creegan insisted violently, "you got to show me. I tell you I ain't a bit stuck on it. Yep, you got to show me. If it's such a pipe why did you send all the way to Chicago for me when New York's full of smooth propositions just askin' for the chance?"

Andrew made no answer in words, but went to his bureau, from which he took out a japanned tin box, which he unlocked with a key from his ring. He brought forth a photograph, which he passed to the curious Creegan.

A single glance sufficed the man. He stared at Andrew in stark amazement.

"Well, I'll be —!" he gasped. "Maggie—Maggie Flint!" He regarded the photograph again, astounded. "Say," he demanded curtly, looking up again, "how did that come here?"

Andrew put forth his hand, possessed himself of the photograph and restored it to the box, which he carefully locked and replaced in the drawer before answering; then at last he turned to the impatiently waiting Creegan, whose thick lips were twitching from nervous excitement.

"Now suppose," he said evenly, "for example, that you planned to steal some valuable jewels you have heard spoken of?"

Creegan's eyes grew furtive. "Like the Wainwright sparklers, hey?"

"And let us suppose further," Andrew continued imperturbably, "that you were apprehended in the act."

The supposition appeared to disconcert Creegan, if one might judge by the thick furrows in his forehead and the savage tightening of his lips.

"Say, you," he grunted. "Just you parade the kind of talk I know. Get that?"

"Suppose you get pinched, collared," Andrew amended tranquilly. "And, furthermore, let us suppose that the owner of the jewels was of an old and honorable family and at this particular time a nominee for high office. Now, do you think he would risk scandal by prosecuting you if it so chanced that you recognized in his wife some one you had known in very different circumstances, some one named, let us say, Maggie Flint?"

A silence fell, in which Andrew stood immobile, impassive, regarding his new tool with a calm yet piercing scrutiny, and Creegan rested again, his widened eyes fast on the other, striving dumbly to digest the bewildering fact that the girl with whom he had wandered fondly in the streets of Chicago years before was become in very truth the mistress of this mansion. At last he shook his head incredulously.

"No," he muttered, "it can't be Maggie—the wife of that swell guy, Wainwright!"

"But it is!" Andrew retorted sharply, and the words carried conviction.

"Gee! Maggie!" he mumbled confusedly. "Well, I'm a son of a gun!"

"I am to understand, then," the Master Mind suggested suavely, "that you know the lady?"

Creegan's dull face lightened instantly. Something of the bestiality bred out of evil years fell from him.

"Do I? Why, I knew her from 'way back. Guess she come from pretty good stock, though her old man was down and out when I knew 'em. She had darn poor pickin's, Maggie had. Any other skit with her looks would have gone to the bad lickety split; but not her! Worked in factories and then got a job after her father died as nurse girl. Kept straighter'n a string all the time. I got foolish over that kid myself. I'd just about made up my mind to marry her when she was caught with the goods and sent to stir. Never could see why she did it. It wa'n't like her to steal. I tried to find her when she come out, but there wa'n't nothin' doin'. And I was dippy over her, Gee! he concluded sheepishly. Andrew then said:

"And, if you should be caught, for a further defense you might perhaps say that robbery was not your intent, but that instead you were here for a meeting with the lady—at her request."

Once again Creegan gaped sheer amazement. Then, swiftly, the light of understanding twinkled in his little eyes.

"I'm wise, 'bo—I'm wise!" he chuckled, with a villainous smirk. "Now, where do they keep the sparklers?"

Forthwith Andrew entered into a detailed explanation concerning the plan of the house, with particular reference to the library, in an alcove of which the safe was set.

"And now," he concluded, "as to the time tonight when you should start operations, I have only to make a suggestion. This room of mine, as you perceive, is situated in the cupola of the house, with windows on each side. In its way it's a sort of beacon at night. The lodgekeeper says that when I put out my light he is sure that every one else in the house is sleeping."

"I got ye, Steve—I got ye!" Creegan declared. Then, in another moment, he spoke with a half-shamed eagerness: "Say, she didn't send for me, did she?"

"That is a leading question," was the answer, with a noncommittal smile.

"That's a leading question."

"Yes, yes!" Creegan agreed, hastily. "I got all that. But about her, now! Do you think there's a chance of her kipplin' out with me? What?"

"A true lover should never be discouraged," came the cryptic reply. As he spoke, Andrew opened the door, and motioned that his visitor should leave the room. "Till 2 o'clock," he said.

BOW CITY

The Fancy Dress Carnival Ball held Bow City rink last Tuesday, the 6th., was an unqualified success, both nature and art contributing to the enjoyment of of the evening. After a hilarious time on the ice the skaters and spectators cheerfully climbed the bank to Mr. Westgate's house, where the ladies had prepared dainties fit for a king. While all were enjoying it some consternation was caused by a stranger suddenly appearing with a well known team of white ponies and a young lady by his side, inquiring for the parson—it certainly did look suspicious, but it turned out to be nothing worse than a breakdown with a Ford car, necessitating hunting up a new tire casing. A collection taken up at the close for the Red Cross Fund netted $14.30 to that worthy cause. The following were in costume on the ice:

Miss Lilian Lewis	Clown, 1st prize
A. Foster	Lady of Fashion
Miss Lewis	Spanish Lady
Miss H. Craig	Lady Rosetta, 1812
T. Howell	Football Player
G. Westgate	Indian Brave
R. Howell	Robin Hood
W. Campbell	Hockey Player
K. Saunders	Bow City Boy
E. Corrish	Cow Girl
Miss M. Fardarleau	Indian Girl
R. Albertson	Cowboy
W. W. Saunders	Prairie Gost
Miss M. LaRosie	Spring
Miss E. Farlardeau

Bow City Baseball Player Napolian LaRosie, A. Craig and M. Craig Gold Dust Triplets. The ice harvest is again in full swing. The second crop of ice being of a much better quality than the first.

W. H. Moore, F. Brewer, R. Farlardeau and Pat Craig were among those attending the Government Agricultural demonstration train school at Travers last week.

D. Campbell is back from a short visit to friends in Saskatchewan.

The Red Cross Society meets every Friday afternoon now instead of every Tuesday. Lots of work is wanting to be done and any ladies not able to attend but willing to help can easily get work to take home with them by applying to the secretary, Mrs. Scoggie.

The boys race at the carnival was some race and at least one boy was on his feet all the time. Ronold Howell won out in good style. The relay race was won by the team captained by Billy Campbell.

The debate between the small tractor and the horse was settled in favor of the latter. A point hard to get over was that there would be no little tractors growing up to take the place of the old one. Nevertheless there are several in this district investing in small tractors, among them one who put up a whirlwind speech in favor of the horse.

AMETHYST

Some of the young people attended church at Kinnondale Sunday night and one young man came home with his head or heart turned badly, for a certain young lady had given him a smile.

Misses Dorothy and Bernice Hill, Mr. Bert Gorham, Mr. Jake Groves, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander and Mr. A. L. Gould spent Monday evening at the home of the Somerville brothers. Lunch was served at midnight so all enjoyed a pleasant evening.

A. Somerville of Reid Hill is here calling on relatives and friends. He intends to buy some horses if he can find some to suit.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Alexander were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. Reid on Sunday last.

The minister, Rev. Saunders, was up on Sunday for church, but there was one present. Shame on all of you! He drove 15 miles while a great many here haven't more than 3 or 4 at the most. The excuse was that it was too cold. Remember, there was another time when they all began to make excuses, but it was too late!

Mr. Del. Somerville, Mrs. Chas. Stiebritz and Miss Vandle were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Seth Somerville on Sunday.

Mrs. Mary Hill took tea with Mrs. Stiebritz one day last week.

What's become of the Ladies' Aid? Have they frozen out entirely this cold weather? Well, perhaps when the weather warms up again they will revive the Aid with double the interest. There is a good deal the ladies can do for the country right now.

Mrs. Annie Armstrong and son, Glen, were Yetwood visitors two or three days last week.

Miss Dorothy Hill spent the night with Miss Ethel Armstrong last Thursday.
